MANAGER NEW HOTEL RESIGNS

A note of sadness crept into the general jubilation of the new hotel's opening early this week with the announcement of the resignation of Carl Wolff, genial manager who in past months had brought the hotel through its final painful stages of development, directed the training of the large staff, and presented a plush smooth-running organization to the Aruba and visiting publics. Mr. Wolff is leaving the Aruba Caribbean because his family's personal needs require his return to the United States. For the time being and until a replacement arrives, Albert E. Rubens, executive vice president of the Condado Hotels organization, will remain in charge.

An announcement by the Condado directors reports their disappointment at losing Mr. Wolff here, but points out that he will remain with the chain, with his talents to be used in the U.S. organization.

Mr. Wolff expressed great pleasure in the associations he had formed during his stay here.
